Questions 1-5 are based on passage I.

Passage I.

Apple is cutting the price of some songs in its market-leading iTunes online store to as little as 69 cents and plans to make every track available without copy protection.

In Apple's final appearance at the Macworld trade show, Apple's top marketing executive, Philip Schiller, said that iTunes song prices will come in three tiers: 69 cents, 99 cents and $1.29. Record companies will choose the prices, which marks a significant change, since Apple previously made all songs sell for 99 cents.

Apple gave the record labels that flexibility on pricing as it got them to agree to sell all songs free of "digital rights management," or DRM, technology that limits people's ability to copy songs or move them to multiple computers. Apple had been offering a limited selection of songs without DRM, but by the end of this quarter, the company said, all 10 million songs in its library will be available that way.

While iTunes is the most popular digital-music store, others have been faster to offer more songs without copy protection. Seattle-based Amazon.com started selling DRM-free music downloads in 2007 and swayed all the major labels to sign on in less than a year.

Schiller also announced that iPhone 3G users will be able to buy songs from the iTunes store using the cellular data network. Previously, iPhone users could shop for tunes when connected to a Wi-Fi hot spot. The iTunes changes marked the highlights of Schiller's run as a stand-in for CEO Steve Jobs, who used to make Macworld the site for some of Apple's biggest product unveilings, such as the iPhone.

Lower iTunes prices were Apple's only nod to the recession as record labels have been asking for years to set varying song prices. Rather than an inexpensive new Mac to lure budget-conscious buyers, Schiller unveiled a new $2,800 Macbook Pro laptop with a 17-inch screen and the sleek aluminum casing the company debuted with the super-thin Macbook Air.

Questions 6-10 are based on passage II.

Passage II.

Today marks the publication of Seventy-nine Short Essays on Design, a collection of writings by Michael Bierut from Princeton Architectural Press. The 272-page hardcover book brings together twenty years of essays on subjects that range from New York's faulty "Push for Walk Signal" buttons, to the disappearance of the AT&T logo, to the implications of Vladimir Nabokov's Pale Fire for interaction designers. Many of the pieces first appeared on Design Observer, the popular blog that Michael edits with Jessica Helfand and Bill Drenttel, including favorites like "Designing Under the Influence," "I Hate ITC Garamond," and "The Road to Hell: Now Paved with Innovation!" Seventy-nine Essays also includes pieces that appeared elsewhere and pieces that have never been published in other collections, like "Waiting for Permission," "How to Become Famous" and "Ten Footnotes on a Manifesto."

Michael's writing is marked by its accessibility, its wit and its almost maniacal eclecticism. For instance, a survey of the entries under the letter "D" in the book's index turns up, among others, Jacques Derrida, Stuart Davis, design by committee, Cameron Diaz, Walt Disney, Dr. Strangelove, Mort Drucker, Marguerite Duras and W.A. Dwiggins. If you seek a design book that navigates with assurance between French semioticians, typographers, movie stars and Mad magazine cartoonists, Seventy-nine Short Essays on Design is the one for you.

While the book has no pictures, Abbott Miller's design provides its own form of visual interest. Each essay is set in a different typeface, and readers can attempt to make real or imaginary connections between essay subject and font selection. We can guess why the essay on AT&T is set in C.H. Griffith's Bell Gothic (it was designed in 1938 for the Bell Telephone Directory) or why the essay about Stanley Kubrick is set in Paul Renner's Futura (it was reportedly the director's favorite typeface); the rationale behind other selections may be a bit more obscure, or even completely nonexistent.
