Jeremy Lin's Rise Has Harvard's Campus Buzzing With 'Lin-Sanity'

Jeremy Lin isn't just an overnight sensation, an international star, and an NBA phenom. He's even helped do the unthinkable at Harvard: gotten Harvard undergraduates excited about Harvard basketball. The New York Knicks haven't lost a game since making Lin, a Harvard graduate, a starter just 10 days ago, and students at Harvard University are as thrilled about it as the rest of the planet.

Lin, who played for Harvard from 2006-2010, has caught the attention of New Yorkers, the media, celebrities and NBA fans across the world, in a phenomenon that has been dubbed "Lin-sanity." Meanwhile, Harvard's basketball team has been continuing its own unlikely success that Lin helped build, having earned rankings in the top 25 this season.

Originally from Northern California, Lin chose Harvard after his first-choice, home-town Stanford University offered him only a walk-on role with the team. After college, Lin went undrafted by pro teams. He eventually landed a spot as a free agent with the Golden State Warriors, made his way to the Houston Rockets, then got picked up by New York after Houston cut him. Lin was originally sought out by the Knicks only after their guard lineup was depleted by injuries. Now the new kid out of Harvard has become the team's star.

Lin scored 109 points in his first four games as a starter, the most of any player since the NBA merged with the ABA in 1976. Harvard senior Keith Wright, who played two seasons with Lin, told ESPN he couldn't be happier for Lin, but notes he's getting asked about his former teammate a lot more. "I'm hearing a lot," says Wright. "Everywhere I go, it's like, 'Yo, did you play with Jeremy?' 'Have you talked to Jeremy?'"
